Welcome to the third issue of my newsletter! In this issue, we will be covering affordable housing.

There has perhaps never been a period in state history in which more people and resources have been aligned to address the affordable housing crisis. As State Treasurer, my housing and economic development goals are broadly to increase housing production, contain costs, spur new technologies, create more opportunities for people of color and women to participate in developments, and to support efforts that empower individuals in distressed communities to become integral to their community’s revitalization.

By advancing the right combination of programs and incentives, I believe we can build wealth in our communities that will help all Californians realize the American Dream, regardless of the zip code someone lives in.

On page 2, in “ Truly a California for All,” Deputy Treasurer Jovan Agee explores what this means and the importance of bringing a new, creative approach to the task of supporting the state’s new vision. Jovan’s role is itself indicative of this new thinking. I have realigned his responsibilities to embrace strategic development for both housing and economic development because they go hand in hand.

This newsletter is not intended to be and should not be used for making investment decisions about State of California bonds or notes. Potential investors should always obtain and read the Official Statement published by the State for each issue of bonds or notes.
Continuing with the affordable housing theme, on page 4 you can read in the "The ABCs of the BCAs" column about three major programs I oversee that are already providing financing and incentives for the construction of affordable housing statewide.

After reading about the California Debt Limit Allocation Committee (CDLAC), the California Tax Credit Allocation Committee (CTCAC), and the California Pollution Control Financing Authority (CPCFA), I encourage you to turn to page 6 and “Ask Fiona.” I’ll point you to the place on our website where you can search cities and zip codes to learn where the state in recent years has spurred construction of affordable housing.

We must not lose sight of our purpose. By focusing on efforts to create wealth in our state there is a path to building our way out of this affordability crisis.

Please keep an eye on future issues of this newsletter for updates on these efforts…and more.

In Public Service,

Fiona

By Deputy Treasurer Jovan Agee

California has an affordability problem, especially when it comes to housing in this state. The future of our residents’ health, safety and wealth depends on access to housing that is affordable.

Governor Gavin Newsom, as part of his January budget unveiling, announced his goal to build 3.5 million homes by 2025. State Treasurer Fiona Ma is his strongest ally in helping to reach that number. Achieving our goal means getting investors, developers and local and state agencies to construct at a pace of 500,000 housing units per year.

As the state agency that oversees the California Debt Limit Allocation Committee (CDLAC), the California Tax Credit Allocation Committee (CTCAC), and the California Pollution Control Financing Authority (CPCFA), the State Treasurer’s Office plays a critical role in how much affordable housing gets produced in California each year.

CDLAC allocates private activity bond authority for purposes including, but not limited to, multifamily and single family housing development. TCAC allocates federal and state tax credits to effectively create and maintain safe, quality, and affordable rental housing for low-income households in California by partnering with developers, investors, and public entities. CPCFA provides low-cost innovative financing for California businesses that make the state more economically prosperous and environmentally clean by, for instance, participating in infill and mixed-use developments on former brownfields.

Treasurer Ma set the tone for her office on Day One. She wants the Treasurer’s Office to be proactive, solution-oriented and to create partnerships with the private sector. She believes that we can’t continue to do business as usual if we are genuinely seeking different outcomes. She also believes that we must apply the same political ‘will do’ attitude to getting affordable housing developed as we do to other more high-profile development projects.

In order to better align our state’s housing goals, the Treasurer is revamping and streamlining existing programs and organizational structures, which means revising regulations to promote production, spur new innovations, and improve cost containment efforts involving affordable housing.
As an example, the Treasurer realigned her office by appointing me her point person for housing and economic development (which also includes Opportunity Zones).

Everywhere you go in California it seems people are concerned about the affordable housing crisis and count on Governor Newsom’s bold vision to pull us through. Californians support the Governor’s ideas. According to a recent Public Policy Institute of California statewide survey, seven in ten respondents support the Governor’s proposed solutions and a record-breaking two-thirds agree that housing affordability is a big problem in their regions.

Also getting a lot of attention around the state is a new economic development tool known as an Opportunity Zone. Opportunity Zones were established by Congress with its Tax Cuts and Jobs Act of 2017 to encourage long-term investments in low-income urban and rural communities nationwide. They provide a tax incentive for investors to re-invest profits in tax-advantaged dedicated Opportunity funds. Opportunity funds use the private capital to make investments in businesses and real estate in Opportunity Zones identified by the state.

My range of responsibilities are in part a response to the recognition that housing affordability and community economic development is a regional, as well as a statewide, challenge. By combining housing, opportunity zones, and economic development, the Treasurer is trying to reduce the roadblocks that can occur when our brightest problem solvers are working separately and in isolation as they struggle to achieve the same outcome.

Under this new structure we hope to strengthen our role as a “matchmaker” in the state, helping various forms of capital find projects and vice versa. Treasurer Ma also is trying to create a program that can provide more housing for community college students and for K-14 teachers. In addition, she is looking at possibly combining and streamlining the activities of several programs under the Treasurer’s Office.

With the first quarter of 2019 behind us, the Treasurer and I feel that we met one of our goals by traveling around the state and listening to a wide array of concerns Californians have related to affordable housing.

We plan to spend the next quarter continuing our trek around the state, while at the same time giving more attention to the operational changes that can better position the state to meet the housing challenges still unfolding before us.

Stay tuned…

The California Tax Credit Allocation Committee (CTCAC), California Debt Limit Allocation Committee (CDLAC), and California Pollution Control Financing Authority (CPCFA)

The California Tax Credit Allocation Committee (CTCAC) assists persons seeking housing, developers building housing, and the owners and managers of existing tax credit projects that benefit low-income housing residents.

CTCAC is based in Sacramento within the State Treasurer’s Office. It administers the federal and state Low-Income Housing Tax Credit Programs. The tax credit programs were created by the Legislature to stimulate private investment in affordable rental housing for low-income Californians.

Credits are available to developers who assure the creation of a certain number of affordable housing units in new construction projects, or at existing properties undergoing rehabilitation.

How it works: The committee allocates tax credits to developers who sell them to investors and this provides a project with equity, spurring the construction of affordable housing.

Developers can apply for 9-percent federal tax credits twice per calendar year, and for 4-percent federal tax credits throughout the year. There are also state tax credits available. Applications for noncompetitive, 4-percent tax credits are reviewed within 60 days. A staff recommendation follows each review and is made to a committee that is chaired by Treasurer Fiona Ma. The committee votes whether to approve the project. Similarly, 9-percent credits are reviewed within 90 days through a competitive process and successful applications are recommended by staff to the committee for approval.

In 2018, TCAC awarded $109.9 million in competitive 9-percent federal Low Income Housing Tax Credits to 70 proposed housing projects and – this is the important part – induced $1.1 billion in private equity investment into the projects, which developed 4,143 affordable housing units.

There were another 135 projects financed with tax-exempt bond proceeds and reserved 4-percent tax credits in 2018. Bond authority used to finance the projects was issued by another program that benefits affordable housing and is overseen by Treasurer Ma, The California Debt Limit Allocation Committee (CDLAC).

CDLAC was created to set California’s annual debt ceiling and administratively allocate the state’s tax-exempt bond authority to issue debt. CDLAC’s programs are used primarily to finance affordable housing developments for low-income Californians.

How it works: CDLAC operates by allocating private activity bonds for Multifamily Qualified Residential Rental Projects (QRRP) and bond allocation for Single Family Mortgage Credit Certificates (MCC) and Mortgage Revenue Bonds (MRB). In 2018 133 QRRP projects and 8 Single Family projects were awarded allocation totaling $4.3 billion. It is estimated the 141 projects will produce approximately 15,352 multifamily units and 1,322 single-family units when construction on the projects ends.

The California Pollution Control Financing Authority (CPCFA) operates the California Recycle Underutilized Sites (CALReUSE) Assessment and Remediation Programs, which assist with the creation of housing in California. CPCFA’s assessment and remediation programs are critical steps in unlocking the potential of vacant and underutilized brownfield properties for housing and local economic development initiatives.

How it works: The program has turned railyards, auto repair facilities and contaminated properties into community assets by providing forgivable loans and grants to transform brownfields and add affordable housing.

CALReUSE has created 7,540 new housing units, of which 80 percent are affordable. The projects are located in 12 counties and strewn across the state from Humboldt in the north, through Santa Clara in the central region, to San Diego in the south.

Fifty-one percent of CALReUSE funded projects are located in disadvantaged communities and 75 percent are located in low-income communities. There are an estimated 90,000 brownfield sites statewide and more than half are located in low-income communities.

Note: Each month we will be sharing information on one of our BCAs and explain how the programs behind the acronym are enhancing the lives of Californians all across the state -- and how you, your family, or your business can share in, and contribute to, California’s prosperity.

Meet Ashley Peters, our April employee of the month! A contract analyst in the Business Services Unit of the State Treasurer’s Office (STO), Ashley began working for us in October 2012 as an office assistant in the administration division.

She currently assists the Treasurer and more than one dozen boards, commissions and authorities (BCAs) in navigating the state’s contracting processes. Colleagues know her for her patience, humility, creativity, and an infectious smile.

The CalSavers team – currently busily rolling out a powerful new retirement savings program for millions of private-sector workers – praises her for providing expert guidance that proved vital to the implementation of the new program.

The retirement savings program faced challenging and unique contracting needs with aggressive deadlines, recalls one CalSavers team member.

“When we originally wanted to go out for a translation services contract, we were developing a full, traditional RFP (Request for Proposals),” he said. “After talking it over with Ashley, she recommended the small business route, which was a new process for staff here. Her input and guidance made it easy to learn the process -- and we ended up with great bids to choose from.”

Ashley is a tremendous resource and serves an integral role within the contracting unit where she keeps all of the office’s BCA contracts up-to-date. Her unit handles about 25 solicitations and 125 contracts each year.

Congrats Ashley!
Dear Fiona,

Can the Treasurer’s Office please provide me with a list of affordable housing in the city of Los Angeles?

Sincerely,

Courtney

Dear Courtney,

Affordable housing data is available on my website. The California Tax Credit Allocation Committee (CTCAC) has created a map and spreadsheet identifying all of the existing multifamily housing projects that were developed using Low Income Housing Tax Credits in California.

The spreadsheet can be searched (or filtered) by city, zip code, or county.

To access the map and spreadsheet, please visit https://www.treasurer.ca.gov/ctcac/projects.asp.

You may also search for Section 8 housing on the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development’s (HUD) website at https://apps.hud.gov/apps/section8/index.cfm, or the Los Angeles Housing Authority’s website at: http://www.hacla.org/

Sincerely,

Fiona

State of California General Obligation (GO) Bonds ($2.02 billion)

The State Treasurer on April 11 announced the sale of $2.02 billion of State of California general obligation (GO) bonds, which included $1.63 billion of bonds used to refinance more than $1.88 billion of bonds issued in April 2009 when the State was experiencing budget challenges and interest rates were higher. Refinancing of the old debt will save taxpayers more than $403 million in debt service costs over the next 10 years, or more than $362 million on a present value basis. These savings along with the savings from the State's March GO bond sale will save taxpayers more than $1.42 billion over the next 19 years.
